TRIBUTE TO THE JUDGE

A GREAT GATHERING OF MEMBERS OF THE BAR AND OTHER CITIZENS IN THE FEDERAL COURT—ELOQUENT ADDRESSES MADE, WITH MANY REFERENCES TO JUDGE DOLE'S PUBLIC SERVICES.

A splendid tribute was paid to United States Judge Dole this morning by members of the bar, on the occasion of his being sworn in and taking the bench. The Federal court was crowded and many people were unable to get in at all. Though court was regularly in session, the remarks made by various speakers were applauded several times. Governor Carter was among those in court, also Mrs. Dole, Mrs. Frear, Mrs. Lorrin Andrews, Mrs. A. G. Hawes and Miss Warner, and a general gathering of Territorial and Federal officials and citizens.

Governor Dole, as he was then, entered the court room a moment after to o'clock, accompanied by Chief Justice Frear, who wore the black robes of his office. The oath was taken at once. It was read by the chief justice in impressive tones and Governor Dole responded in a voice that could be plainly heard. His response to the oath ended his term as Governor and made George R. Carter Acting Governor.

Sanford B. Dole went through the ceremony with his usual calmness and dignity. The written oath was handed to him by Chief Justice Frear and he sat down and signed it, after which the chief justice signed as witness, and then Dole took the bench and Marshal Hendry opened the court according to the usual form.

Judge Dole was very brief in his remarks to the bar. He said that he anticipated great satisfaction in administering the work of the court and that resuming his old relations with the bar gave him pleasure. He anticipated working together with the members of the bar for those ends for which courts are established, "which are largely the proper administration of justice between man and man."

W. O. Smith said that as president of the Bar Association it was his pleasant duty to express the bar's welcome of Governor Dole to the Federal bench and to express the pleasure with which himself and the community welcomed the appointment. "It is appropriate that reference should be made at this time to your long public service," said the speaker. "It is not a light thing to render long years of continuous service to the public, and I feel that in resuming judicial duties it will be with the same high regard for the great principles of justice, with the same judgement and mercy, as have characterized your administrations of public offices in the past. Of the three departments of government, legislative, executive and judiciary, none is higher than the judiciary—the administering of justice between man and man. In the history of our Hawaiian courts, they have always been a safeguard of justice and a bulwark of the rights of the people and by this they have earned the world's respect, and we feel that under this appointment they will hold it. In behalf of the bar I take great pleasure in expressing our sentiments of welcome and appreciation."

General A. S. Hartwell, senior member of our bar, and Cecil Brown, next to him on the roll of attorneys of the Supreme Court of the Territory, are here, and will further express the sentiments of the members."

General Hartwell made an address in which there were references to political events of the recent past never before made public. "Judge Dole," he said, "you have had evil enough said about you in the last ten years to make it appropriate that on this occasion, when you lay aside the executive work you have so long carried on, you should hear a few pleasant things. I don't think all the nice things should be said about a man after he is dead or by partisans. This community of Honolulu is one of varied nationalities and various ways of looking at things, but is after all in my opinion of a good kind."

"When in January, 1893, the crisis occurred, the then occupant of the throne had for the time at least disavowed constitutional obligations, and in the opinion of a majority of the vigorous minds here it was a fit occasion for declaring the throne vacant. It was a great question whether Kaulani, the heiress in line, should be elevated to the throne or a new government be established. I don't know myself except by inference what were your views on that point, but you were able to do what many are not able to do—to follow without regard to self the course decided by the majority. It was a critical time. In my opinion there was not a single person in this community who could have taken the position you took with equal success, and convinced all classes, both friends and opponents, the masses and the comparatively small American element, that your course was always one of complete integrity and desire to safeguard the public interests. It was this that carried the country through those critical years and I think history will so record the facts."

"As far as I know the main criticism of you has been that your fault was that of not being partisan enough. Whether from temperament or your view of right principles, you were not regarded as a successful politician. I speak plainly. That was just what was wanted during those years. That feeling even among opponents that you would see the fair thing done regardless of whom it affected was the greatest strength of the government."

General Hartwell said that the offices Dole had held had come to him unsought, and that it was rare good fortune for a man to be able to say so. When annexation was completed and there was a question as to who should be governor, Dole's friends had felt that he should declare himself and say if he wanted the office. "I took the liberty of telling you of this feeling among your friends," continued the speaker, "and of saying that you should lay aside your principle of the office seeking the man. But I went away to Washington without the slightest hint as to whether you wanted the governorship or not. You wouldn't even tell me whether you would take it or not. Few believed this. In fact it was stated that the principal object of my visit to Washington was to secure your appointment as governor." General Hartwell said that so far as he knew the position of Federal judge had come to Dole in the same way, and he closed with stating that he believed the whole

DEATH OF COL. CORNWELL

A PAROXYSM OF HEART DISEASE CARRIED HIM OFF AT 6:30 O'CLOCK THIS MORNING—HAD LIVED IN HAWAII FOR ABOUT HALF A CENTURY—HIS CAREER AND HIS FAMILY.

William H. Cornwell died this morning at 6:30 o'clock, of heart disease at his home, Waiakapu, Maui.

The news was received here by wireless telegraph during the forenoon, and rapidly spread from mouth to mouth, with many expressions of regret, for he had a very large circle of friends, and was cordially liked. No details of the death, or of the arrangements for the funeral have been received here as yet.

Though his death was sudden, and came unexpectedly and as a shock to his friends, it is probable that it was not altogether a surprise to himself. For two or three years he has suffered from symptoms which were regarded as serious, and he went to the coast to consult specialists on the matter. While in San Francisco on this errand, he suffered a severe attack. Expert opinion was divided as to whether he was suffering from acute dyspepsia or from a serious condition of the heart. Of late, however, he himself expressed himself as satisfied that he was suffering from heart disease and he told Col. George W. Macfarlane, his friend of years, that he suffered a great deal, and spoke as though he recognized that any day might be his last.

Col. Cornwell was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., about fifty-nine years ago. In the fifties he came with his parents and his brother John who died many years ago, to Hawaii. Henry Cornwell, his father, with James Louzada, Henry Cornwell's brother-in-law, started the Waiakapu sugar plantation in the middle or late fifties, and ran it successfully until about 1889 when W. H. Cornwell, who had had charge of the mill for his father, together with Col. George W. Macfarlane, bought out the elder Cornwell for about $250,000, the property purchased including the land then known as Waiakapu common, about 12,000 acres, which is now included in the property of the Hawaiian Commercial & Sugar Company. It was after this purchase that Col. Macfarlane showed Claus Spreckels this land and Spreckels decided to start the Hawaiian Commercial & Sugar Company. It was in connection with the starting of the Hawaiian Commercial and the grant to Spreckels by Kalakaua of water rights and rights of way for ditches, that a difference arose between Kalakaua and his cabinet, and at the instance of Spreckels, Kalakaua called for the resignation of his ministers at midnight.

Waiakapu plantation of later date was sold to Hawaiian Commercial. After this sale, Col. Cornwell devoted himself to ranch interests, starting a ranch in the Kula region of Maui, but retaining the old homestead at Waiakapu. It was in this business he was engaged up to the time of his death. W. H. Cornwell married Miss Blanche Macfarlane, daughter of the elder Henry Macfarlane. Of this marriage were born three children, all of whom survive. W. H. Cornwell, Jr., Mrs. John S. Walker, and Mrs. A. A. Brainerd. Their mother died about fifteen years ago. About a year and a half ago Col. Cornwell married a second time, Mrs. J. Colvin. She survives him.

Besides his children, two sisters, Mrs. Vidin and Mrs. Widdifield survive him, and another, Mrs. E. B. Friel was burned to death about a year ago in the burning of her residence in Kuanua valley. Through his mother, Col. Cornwell was related to the family of Captain Makee. Col. Cornwell was minister of Finance in one of the cabinets of Queen Liliuokalani, shortly before the overthrow. He was a Colonel on the staff of Kalakaua. He was an intimate friend of Claus and John D. Spreckels as the latter's guest and about two years ago accompanied John D. Spreckels at the latter's guest on a trip to Australia. He was a delegate to the Kansas City Democratic National convention in July 1900 and was Democratic National Committeeman for the Territory at the time of his death.

He and his wife returned to Maui from a visit to Honolulu, only about a week ago. He leaves an estate valued at about $50,000. It is said.

SEEK CARTER'S ADVICE.

County officials from the other islands are calling upon Governor Carter almost daily for advice and information as to how to run their offices. A delegation including most of those selected in West Hawaii called some days ago and had a long talk with the new governor, and Maui Home Rulers have also been seeking counsel.

The principal difficulty is as to the line of division between the county and Territorial departments, and it is expected that some of these questions will ultimately be determined in court.

A lame shoulder is usually caused by rheumatism of the muscles, and may be cured by the use of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. This liniment is unequalled as a soothing lotion. One application gives relief. Try it. For sale by all dealers, Benson, Smith & Co., general agents.

NOTICE TO STOCKHOLDERS.

The notice of stockholders in incorporated companies is particularly directed to the following remarkable statement of facts. There is one corporation in the islands which has been doing business for over ten years and which is not affected by either hard times or flush times; ways received not only every dollar paid in on their stock, but good and substantial accumulated profits. It is called the Pioneer Building & Loan Association of Hawaii, and has just moved its office to No. 122 King street.
